

A-TRAK QUESTIONS LAS VEGAS CLUB'S 'DJ RULES'

06 February 2014 Words → News

A Las Vegas nightclub has caused a storm after posting its 'DJ rules' online, drawing questions from all corners about their bizarre stance.

The club, After, an after hours venue in Sin City, posted a photo of the rules, written by the club's Managing Partner Thom Svast, outlining its wish for DJs to refrain from playing hip, trap and dubstep as well as any tracks from globally recognised artists such as Swedish House Mafia, Calvin Harris and Deadmau5.

A-Trak, a long-time hip hop connoisseur, has questioned the club's methods, taking to Facebook to start a debate on the stringent rules.

"I guess they're trying to stand for pure electronic music... I don't really agree with everything they're saying (no hip hop? come on) but I also understand the context in Vegas. Change is good, maybe these guys are a bit too stuck up the other way though. What do you think?"

Although After might be rubbing a few DJs up the wrong way, its certainly done its reputation no harm having only been open for one weekend. Very clever.
